If you are among the 10 million people who live in the Southland, your life is touched by activities of the Southern California Association of Governments (SCAG). Led by local elected officials, SCAG is a planning and coordinating agency that works to solve problems which extend beyond local boundaries, such as transportation, water quality and housing. SCAG's members are the governments of six counties (Imperial, Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino and Ventura) and 126 cities within those counties. For over 10 years, these members have shown that local governments can work together and still preserve their separate identities. The organization of SCAG begins with the General Assembly, which meets twice a year, and the Executive Committee, which meets monthly. Every member city and county in the region elects at least one representative and one alternate to the General Assembly. Between meetings of the General Assembly, SCAG is under the supervision of its Executive Committee. This group is composed of 19 elected officials from member cities and counties, such as county supervisors, mayors and city council members. From its members, the Executive Committee elects the SCAG president, and first and second vice presidents. SCAG also works through four major committees of elected officials: Environmental Quality and Resource Conservation, Human Services, Transportation and Utilities, and Community and Economic Development. Aided by technical advisory groups, these committees initiate policies and make specific recommendations for adoption by the Executive Committee and General Assembly.
